Welcome to our 2018/2019 Season!

I am thrilled to begin this season with the world premiere of an autobiographical tour-de-force infused with an enthralling score—and twists that will take your breath away.

We proudly welcome David Cale—a writer and performer whose remarkable body of work has beguiled and moved me for more than 30 years—back to the Goodman with his musical memoir, We’re Only Alive for A Short Amount of Time.

David first appeared at the Goodman in 1988 with his one-man show The Redthroats. The young David had left his native England for New York several years earlier, and was in the early stages of becoming one of America’s most acclaimed solo artists. In the intervening decades, David has performed his works in countless theaters around the country. As a writer, he recently collaborated with actor Billy Crudup on Harry Clarke, a one-man show that earned an Obie and two Lucille Lortel Awards after its premiere at New York’s Vineyard Theatre.

Now, David returns with his newest piece, which he describes as his “most personal work to date.” We’re Only Alive for A Short Amount of Time explores how David’s turbulent childhood in Luton, England contributed to his transformation from a wounded, wide-eyed adolescent to a man who fully embraces life and art.
We first presented this piece in last year’s New Stages Festival—and I immediately felt that this devastating-yet-life-affirming tale would captivate and thrill audiences. And although I have known David for over three decades, I am honored now to collaborate with him as a director for the first time.

We’re Only Alive for A Short Amount of Time is a fitting opener for a season filled with expansive, relevant works of art that are at once entertaining and challenging. More than half of the shows in the year ahead have emerged from our New Stages Festival, which continues to be a terrific incubator for new plays—like David’s extraordinary work.

We’re Only Alive for A Short Amount of Time reminds us that even when chaos looms, we still can seek beauty. I cannot imagine a more eternally relevant piece with which to begin our new season.

Writer and Performer David Cale Dares to Look Back

By Thomas Connors

“The past beats inside me like a second heart,” says Max Morden, the middle-aged widower in The Sea, a novel by Irish author John Banville. Chances are, we all feel that pulse from time to time. Sometimes it floods us with happy memories. And when it doesn’t, when it’s more a tightness in the chest than a warm feeling, we get the old brain to override it—as if it were a ringing in the ears, or a stiff joint—and move on.

David Cale is not moving on.

We’re Only Alive for A Short Amount of Time—the latest solo show from the British-born actor/ writer/composer—is propelled by the past. Cale has borrowed from his own life before, but with this world premiere, he diggs deeper to explore what has made him the man he is. He not only revisits some dreamy solitary hours of his own youth in the rough industrial town of Luton, but conjures the younger days of his mother and father, before life did its dirty work and cast a pall of disrespect and dissatisfaction over the marriage.

Eager to escape the life he knew and a country that seemed to promise a less-than- thrilling future, Cale, who’d had a band in England, arrived in New York in 1979, determined to be a singer. “Where I grew up, people never left the town,” says Cale. “You were born there, you died there. And you worked in the car factory or you worked in the hat factory. The idea of rising above, or creating something that was not the norm, it just never came up.”

Once in New York, Cale held the usual odd jobs while finding his way as a performer. He began to write his own songs, and when he wasn’t singing them, he recited the lyrics at poetry readings. Before long he found himself doing monologues, then monologues with music. “I didn’t really know people in America when I arrived. So all I was ever doing was working or trying to work, and one thing sort of led to another,” he recalls. “There was a lot of interest in solo shows—and Eric Bogosian and Spalding Gray, in particular, had gotten a lot of attention critically and from audiences. I sort of caught a wave.”

That wave brought Cale to the Goodman in 1988, where he performed The Redthroats, his one-man show that told the tale of a working-class kid in an unhappy home who sought relief listening to Judy Garland records for hours at a time before escaping to London and then the States. It was, as Rick said to Louis Renault in Casablanca, “the beginning of a beautiful friendship.” The Goodman produced Cale’s Smooch Music the following year.

“I don’t know if it was [Goodman Theatre Artistic Director Robert] Falls or [Executive Director] Roche Schulfer who said it, but in the late ‘80s, one of them said, ‘We want you to consider this your home’. And they meant it. They were, and are, the backbone of my career. Anybody in the theater in the U.S. knows the Goodman. So the fact that the Goodman invested so much in me artistically gave me a kind of status.” (Harry Clarke, Cale’s one-man, multi-character show starring Billy Crudup, recently had a successful New York run off-Broadway).

More than three decades into his career, Cale remains very much an intuitive artist, not a man with a plan. “I sometimes have a title, but I don’t really know what I’m going to write exactly,” he relates. “I can tell the territory, but where I end up, I just never know. I know that I’m drawn to people who are overlooked or underrepresented. I think in all the shows, there’s an emotional autobiography going on, even if the facts are wildly fictional, or even if the stories seem quite removed from me.”

_We’re Only Alive for A Short Amount of Time_ (developed through the Goodman’s _New Stages_ Festival) is a song-studded memoir, a work that was a long time coming. “A friend of mine who saw the _New Stages_ presentation, who’s seen eight of my shows over the years in New York and Chicago, said, ‘It’s all been leading to this,’” shares Cale. “And there’s truth to that. But I think it was out of my reach a few years ago, artistically. I didn’t want people to feel sorry for me, I didn’t want it to be indulgent or just a slog through depressing stuff. It had to be, to some degree, about transcending your past, your background, your genetics. And redefining yourself. And I’m on a little bit of a mission with this in terms of trying to represent my mother, who was an extremely abused, overlooked and misunderstood person. There’s definitely a strong drive in me to try and honor her in some quite ambitious and quite substantial way.”

“I want to aim really high, artistically and emotionally,” says Cale. “In the ‘70s I saw Bette Midler, and what she did to me as an audience member in making me feel connected to life, I want to do to other people. If I can…if I possibly can. It’s what I’m here for.”

KIMBERLY ANN McCANN* (Stage Manager) is in her fifth season with Goodman Theatre, having most recently worked on Having Our Say: The Delany Sisters’ First 100 Years. Chicago credits include The Book of Will, Miss Bennet and You Can’t Take It With You at Northlight Theatre and Million Dollar Quartet. Broadway credits include Curtains. Off-Broadway credits include Bill W. and Dr. Bob, How to Save the World and John Ferguson. Regional credits include work with Milwaukee Repertory Theater, Skylight Music Theatre, Tuacahn Center of the Arts and the Juilliard School.

ROCHE EDWARD SCHULFER (Goodman Theatre Executive Director) is a lifelong resident of the Chicago area and started his career working in the Goodman Theatre box office. He majored in economics at the University of Notre Dame, where he managed the cultural arts commission. As executive director since 1980, Schulfer has overseen close to 400 productions and presentations, including over 150 premieres, in local, national and international venues. Among his proudest achievements was instituting the Goodman’s annual production of A Christmas Carol in 1978. During his more than 30-year partnership with Artistic Director Robert Falls, the Goodman has received numerous awards for excellence, including Tony Awards for Outstanding Regional Theater and the 50th anniversary production of Death of a Salesman, recognition by Time magazine as the “Best Regional Theatre” in the U.S. and the Pulitzer Prize for Lynn Nottage’s Ruined. From 1988 to 2000 Schulfer worked with Goodman trustees, artists and staff to coordinate the relocation of the Goodman to the Theatre District. He was a founder and twice chair of the League of Chicago Theatres, the association of more than 200 Chicago area theaters and producers. Schulfer has been privileged to serve on the boards and in leadership roles with Arts Alliance Illinois (the statewide advocacy coalition); Theatre Communications Group (the national service organization for more than 450 not-for-profit theaters); the Performing Arts Alliance (the national advocacy consortium of more than 18,000 organizations and individuals); the League of Resident Theatres (the management association of 70 major U.S. theater companies); Lifeline Theatre, Theatre Wit and the Arts & Business Council. He is deeply honored to have been recognized with the League of Chicago Theater’s Lifetime Achievement Award; Theatre Communication Group’s Visionary Leadership Award; Actors’ Equity Association for promoting diversity and equal opportunity in Chicago theater; the American Arts Alliance and Arts Alliance Illinois for arts advocacy; the Arts & Business Council for distinguished contributions to Chicago’s artistic vitality; Chicago magazine and the Chicago Tribune as a “Chicagoan of the Year”; the City of Chicago; Columbia College Chicago for entrepreneurial leadership; the Joseph Jefferson Awards Committee for his partnership with Robert Falls; Lawyers for the Creative Arts; Lifeline Theatre’s Raymond R. Snyder Award for Commitment to the Arts; Season of Concern for support of direct care for those living with HIV/AIDS; and Vision 2020 for promoting gender equality and diversity in the workplace and with an Honorary Doctor of Fine Arts degree from North Central College. Schulfer has taught at DePaul University, lectured regularly at Southern Methodist University and consulted on strategic planning for arts groups. In fall, 2018, he is teaching a theater management seminar at Notre Dame. Over the last year, Schulfer has frequently been invited to present Why Not For Profit Theater, an explanation of the economics of the performing arts and theater business models (which he co-authored with James E. Annable), to arts groups and associations around the country.

THE PUBLIC THEATER is theater of, by, and for all people. Artist-driven, radically inclusive and fundamentally democratic, The Public continues the work of founder Joe Papp as a civic institution engaging with some of the most important ideas and social issues of today. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Oskar Eustis and Executive Director Patrick Willingham, The Public’s programming includes new work at its Astor Place home, Free Shakespeare in the Park, The Mobile Unit, Public Forum, Under the Radar, Public Studio, Public Works, Public Shakespeare Initiative and Joe’s Pub. The Public is currently represented on Broadway by the Tony Award-winning musical Hamilton by Lin-Manuel Miranda. Their programs and productions can be seen regionally across the country and around the world. Recipient of 59 Tony, 170 Obie, 53 Drama Desk, 54 Lucille Lortel, 32 Outer Critics Circle and 13 New York Drama Desk Awards and six Pulitzer Prizes. PublicTheater.org
