Whether you are a longtime fan of August Wilson, or are experiencing one of his works for the first time today, there is always something new to be discovered in his plays. Between 1986 and 2007, the Goodman produced all 10 works in his Century Cycle, a group of interconnected plays that provide a panoramic view of Black American life in the 20th century. August, a Pittsburgh-born poet-turned-playwright, was then in the process of establishing himself as a quintessential American writer. We felt honored that he entrusted the Goodman with the world premieres of two plays in the Cycle: Seven Guitars in 1995 and Gem of the Ocean in 2003. By the time we had produced the entire Cycle—becoming the first theater in the nation to do so—August had passed away, leaving behind timeless plays that are simultaneously realistic and poetic. I am thrilled now to revive Gem of the Ocean, a lyrical and stirring exploration of the legacies of slavery and what freedom means in both personal and political realms. Though not the first play August wrote, it is set in 1904 and represents the first decade of the 20th century.

Counted among August’s many collaborators in his lifetime is director Chuck Smith, a longtime member of the Goodman’s Artistic Collective and a champion of Black theater in Chicago and across the nation. In addition to his many Goodman directing credits—which include Two Trains Running, Objects in the Mirror, Pullman Porter Blues and By the Way, Meet Vera Stark—he has worked at regional theaters across the country, including the Oregon Shakespeare Festival, Milwaukee Repertory Theater and Seattle Repertory Theatre. He also participated in the development of Gem of the Ocean by serving as dramaturg for the original production. Chuck’s passion for August’s work—and for deepening audiences’ understanding of Black history—make him the ideal director for this production.

Although we all miss August’s presence, I am thrilled that his words still echo through our theater. I hope his poetry and humanity will stay with you long after the curtain call.

Robert Falls,
Artistic Director of Goodman Theatre
August Wilson had a special relationship with Chicago—including a one-of-a-kind collaboration with longtime Goodman Resident Director Chuck Smith. As he prepares to direct what he considers the most important work in the 10-play Century Cycle, Mr. Smith opens up about his time spent with the Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright.

QUESTION: Tell us about your collaboration with August while he was alive—and how you've worked to preserve his legacy.

ANSWER: I’d describe my relationship with Mr. Wilson as a 'casual working relationship.' We got to know one another personally in 1997, during the ten-day preview period for my Goodman production of Ma Rainey’s Black Bottom. When we were not rehearsing, I drove him around to my favorite spots on Chicago’s south side. Since he passed away in 2005, I’ve directed seven productions of his plays nationwide, and curated two August Wilson festivals at the Goodman.
Q: You were tapped to dramaturg an August Wilson world-premiere production! What was the experience like, and are you applying that knowledge to your 2022 production?

A: As dramaturg on the world premiere of Gem of the Ocean in 2003, I provided research materials for the actors as well as script notes and suggestions to August. Naturally, some of the character development issues from those original rehearsals slip into our current rehearsals. This is the third production of this play I’ve directed, and each time I find myself approaching The City of Bones sequence in a different manner.

Q: August Wilson is counted among our country's most important playwrights; why is this play, in particular, important?

A: No other playwright has created a cycle of 10 stand-alone plays, two of which are Pulitzer Prize winners. In my opinion, Gem of the Ocean is the most important play of all 10, because it begins the cycle.

Q: What do you hope will stay with the audience after experiencing this production?
A: I wish the audience leaves the theater asking themselves if they are doing their part in our American Democracy? If they consider themselves a good citizen? If they all, like some of the characters in the play, are Standing Up?

Neena Arndt is the Resident Dramaturg for Goodman Theatre.
The Ground on Which He Stood:
August Wilson and The Century Cycle

By Jared Bellot

It was a keynote address that sent shock waves through the theater industry.
Playwright August Wilson stood before an audience at the Theatre Communications Group National Conference (June 1996) and declared: “I am what is known, at least among the followers and supporters of the ideas of Marcus Garvey, as a ‘race man.’ That is simply that I believe that race matters—that it is the largest, most identifiable and most important part of our personality.”
Wilson, who had already come to be known as one of the most influential playwrights of the 20th century, made it clear that he was unable and unwilling to separate his Blackness from his artistry—and offered a sharp indictment of an industry that too often underfunded Black theater and overlooked Black stories.

Wilson demanded the opportunity for Black artists to practice self-determination, and in the process, rooted his body of work in the complicated and oft-unspoken history of Black experience in America. Using the ground as a central metaphor, he stated, “I stand myself and my art squarely on the self-defining ground of the slave quarters and find the ground to be hallowed and made fertile by the blood and bones of the men and women who can be described as warriors on the cultural battlefield that affirmed their self-worth.”

August Wilson (born Frederick August Kittel Jr.) was born on April 27, 1945 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, the fourth child of Daisy Wilson, a Black housekeeper, and Frederick August Kittel Sr., a German immigrant who left the family when Wilson was a child. Wilson grew up in Pittsburgh’s Hill District, a historically Black neighborhood and cultural hub for African American businesses and artists that would later become the setting for many of his plays.

Wilson’s mother remarried in 1958, and the family relocated to the predominantly white neighborhood of Hazelwood. As a mixed race child in a predominantly white space, Wilson often grappled with his own racial identity and struggled to fit in with his peers, as he was one of just 14 Black students. In Hazelwood, Wilson and his family were frequent targets of racial threats and harassment, including an incident that led Wilson to quit school at age 15 after being accused by his teacher of having plagiarized a paper.

After leaving school, Wilson committed to self-education, spending time at the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh, and returning to the Hill District to learn from the community there. Wilson became involved with the Black Arts Movement in the 1960s; in 1968, he became the cofounder and director of Pittsburgh’s Black Horizons Theatre.

He was deeply inspired by what he referred to as “my four Bs”: poet Jorge Luis Borges, playwright Amiri Baraka, painter Romare Bearden, and, most significantly, the blues. For Wilson, the blues represented not only “the best literature we have,” but a sense of connection and rootedness to the ancestors that came before and a language of the Black community that was entirely unique.

The defining project of Wilson’s playwriting career—‘The Century Cycle’ (also sometimes referred to as ‘The Pittsburgh Cycle’) is a series of ten interconnected plays documenting the history, culture and lived experiences of African Americans over the 20th century. Staged over the course of three decades, and completed just before the author’s death in 2005, The Century Cycle offers an articulation of Black traditions as told through the evolution of a single neighborhood over generations. All of the plays (save for Ma Rainey’s Black Bottom, which is set in Chicago) take place in the Hill District, the same neighborhood that Wilson grew up in, with each play set in a different decade of the 20th century.

Wilson says of his work,: “I wanted to place this culture on stage in all its richness and fullness and to demonstrate its ability to sustain us all in areas of human life and endeavor and through profound movements of our history in which the larger society has thought less of us than we have thought of ourselves” (The New York Times, 2000). While the plays are not connected in the sense that they don’t tell a single, serialized story, they do share a common set of roots and speak to one another on an emotional and spiritual level.
Characters reappear at different stages in their lives, past and future ancestors are featured in various plays, and locations are echoed and revisited. In The Century Cycle, Wilson chooses to focus on characters and stories that represent everyday, working class Black people. Grounding the plays in what he describes as “what I felt were the most important issues confronting black Americans for that decade,” Wilson manages to illuminate larger historical patterns and trends—the trauma of slavery, racial harassment, redlining, gentrification, stagnant wages, the pursuit of the American dream—through small interactions of daily life. Drawing on a rich African American literary tradition, the plays in The Century Cycle also feature spiritual and supernatural elements juxtaposed against the naturalism of their urban backdrops. Wilson believed deeply that Black theater, like the Black experience, is unique and distinct, and therefore insisted that his plays only be produced by theaters that would hire Black directors and designers. While this meant that a number of predominantly white theaters had not developed relationships with Black artists were unable to stage Wilson’s work, he stood by his belief that “[Black people] cannot allow others to have authority over our cultural and spiritual products.” In doing so, Wilson helped to provide work for Black theater makers largely ignored in the American theater and ensure that his stories were told by those who shared the experience of being Black in America.

While many theaters have produced plays from The Century Cycle, Goodman Theatre was the first theater in the world to produce the entire cycle of plays in productions that spanned from 1986 to 2007. Chuck Smith’s 2022 production of Gem of The Ocean marks only the second time the Goodman has revisited Wilson’s work after Two Trains Running (also directed by Chuck Smith in 2015).

Widely celebrated during his lifetime, Wilson received numerous honors and awards during his career—including, notably, a Tony Award and Pulitzer Prize for Fences, a second Pulitzer for The Piano Lesson, as well as seven New York Drama Critics’ Circle Awards for best play. Two weeks after his death in 2005, Broadway’s Virginia Theatre was renamed the August Wilson Theatre, the first Broadway theater to bear the name of an African American.
Wilson’s legacy is undeniable. Between the years of 1959, when Lorraine Hansberry’s A Raisin in the Sun premiered on Broadway, and 1984, when Wilson debuted with Ma Rainey’s Black Bottom at the Cort Theatre, not a single play penned by a Black playwright managed to find success on Broadway. However, Wilson’s critical and commercial success helped to usher in a new era for many Black artists who had previously been unable to gain traction. His work created opportunities for artists such as Kenny Leon, Samuel L. Jackson, Courtney B. Vance, Angela Bassett, Ruben Santiago-Hudson, Laurence Fishburne, Suzan-Lori Parks, Lynn Nottage and Charles Smith, all of whom who have gone on to create legacies in their own regard.

But has the American Theater met the challenge issued by Wilson in his “The Ground on Which I Stand” keynote speech? Has the American Theater, in the past 25 years, created the space for Black artists to practice self-definition? Not quite. While every new play on Broadway this past fall was written by a Black playwright, the industry at large is still grappling with complicated questions around systemic racism, representation and equity among artists. Many Black theater artists and companies still struggle to remain financially sustainable. While there are more Black theater artists than ever before carving out for themselves lives in the theater, still Black artists must fight against an industry rooted in the tenets of white supremacy to, in the words of Wilson himself, “Let us be the catalysts of our future and our images. Let us be the custodians of our culture, of when it’s dispersed, how it’s dispersed, when it’s disseminated, and to whom.”

We must keep fighting forward to build a more solid foundation for the ground on which we stand.

AUGUST WILSON (Playwright, 1945-2005) authored Gem of the Ocean, Joe Turner’s Come and Gone, Ma Rainey’s Black Bottom, The Piano Lesson, Seven Guitars, Fences, Two Trains Running, Jitney, King Hedley II and Radio Golf. These works explore the heritage and experience of African Americans, decade by decade, over the course of the 20th century. Goodman Theatre was the first in the country to have produced every play in Mr. Wilson’s cycle. In 2003, Mr. Wilson made his professional stage debut in his one-man show How I Learned What I Learned. Mr. Wilson’s work garnered many awards, including Pulitzer Prizes for Fences (1987) and The Piano Lesson (1990); a Tony Award for Fences; Great Britain’s Olivier Award for Jitney; as well as seven New York Drama Critics Circle Awards for Ma Rainey’s Black Bottom, Fences, Joe Turner’s Come and Gone, The Piano Lesson, Two Trains Running, Seven Guitars and Jitney. Additionally, the cast recording of Ma Rainey’s Black Bottom received a 1985 Grammy Award and Mr. Wilson received a 1995 Emmy Award nomination for his screenplay adaptation of The Piano Lesson. Mr. Wilson’s early works include the one-act plays The Janitor, Recycle, The Coldest Day of the Year, Malcolm X, The Homecoming and the musical satire Black Bart and the Sacred Hills. Mr. Wilson received many fellowships and awards, including Rockefeller and Guggenheim Fellowships in Playwriting, the Whiting Writers’ Award, the 2003 Heinz Award, a 1999 National Humanities Medal by the President of the United States and numerous honorary degrees from colleges and universities, as well as the only high school diploma ever issued by the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh. He was an alumnus of New Dramatists, a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and a 1995 inductee into the American Academy of Arts and Letters. October 16, 2005, Broadway renamed the theater located at 245 West 52nd Street the August Wilson Theatre. Mr. Wilson was born and raised in the Hill District of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and lived in Seattle, Washington, at the time of his death. He is survived by his two daughters, Sakina Ansari and Azula Carmen Wilson, and his wife, costume designer Constanza Romero.

CHUCK SMITH (Director) is a member of Goodman Theatre’s Board of Trustees and is Goodman Theatre’s Resident Director. He is also a resident director at the Westcoast Black Theatre Troupe in Sarasota, Florida. Goodman credits include the Chicago premieres of Objects in the Mirror; Pullman Porter Blues; By the Way, Meet Vera Stark; Race; The Good Negro; Proof and The Story; the world premieres of By the Music of the Spheres and The Gift Horse; James Baldwin’s The Amen Corner, which transferred to Boston’s Huntington Theatre Company, where it won the Independent Reviewers of New England (IRNE) Award for Best Direction; A Raisin in the Sun; Blues for an Alabama Sky; August Wilson’s and Ma Rainey’s Black Bottom; Ain’tMisbehavin’; the 1993 to 1995 productions of A Christmas Carol; Crumbs From the Table of Joy; Vivisections from a Blown Mind and The Meeting. He served as dramaturg for the Goodman’s world-premiere production of August Wilson’s Gem of the Ocean. He directed the New York premiere of Knock Me a Kiss and The Hooch for the New Federal Theatre and the world premiere of Knock Me a Kiss at Chicago’s Victory Gardens Theater, where his other directing credits include Master Harold... and the Boys, Home, Dame Lorraine and Eden, for which he received a Jeff Award nomination. ROCHE EDWARD SCHULFER (Goodman Theatre Executive Director) started working in the Goodman Theatre box office and became executive director in 1980. Since that time he has overseen more than 350 productions including more than 150 premieres. He initiated the Goodman’s annual production of A Christmas Carol, which celebrated 42 years as Chicago’s leading holiday arts tradition in 2019. In partnership with Artistic Director Robert Falls, Mr. Schulfer led the establishment of quality, diversity and community engagement as the core values of Goodman Theatre. During their tenure, the Goodman has received numerous awards for excellence, including the Tony Award for Outstanding Regional Theater, recognition by Time magazine as the “Best Regional Theatre” in the U.S., the Pulitzer Prize for Lynn Nottage’s Ruined and many Jeff Awards for outstanding achievement in Chicago area theater. Schulfer has negotiated the presentation of numerous Goodman Theatre productions to national and international venues. He coordinated the 12-year process to relocate the Goodman to the Theatre District in 2000. To mark his 40th anniversary with the Goodman, his name was added to the theater’s “Walk of Stars.” Schulfer was a founder and twice chair of the League of Chicago Theatres, the trade association of more than 200 Chicago area theaters and producers. He has been privileged to serve in leadership roles with Arts Alliance Illinois (the statewide advocacy coalition); Theatre Communications Group (the national service organization for more than 500 not-for-profit theaters); the Performing Arts Alliance (the national advocacy consortium of more than 18,000 organizations and individuals); the League of Resident Theatres (the management association of over 70 leading U.S. theater companies); Lifeline Theatre; the Arts & Business Council and Theater Wit. Mr. Schulfer is honored to have been recognized with the League of Chicago Theater’s Lifetime Achievement Award; Theatre Communication Group’s Visionary Leadership Award; Actors’ Equity Association for promoting diversity and equal opportunity in Chicago theater; the American Arts Alliance and Arts Alliance Illinois for arts advocacy; the Arts & Business Council for distinguished contributions to Chicago’s artistic vitality; Chicago magazine and the Chicago Tribune as a “Chicagoan of the Year”; the City of Chicago; the Chicago Loop Alliance’s “Illumination Award,” honoring his commitment to Chicago’s theater district; Columbia College Chicago for entrepreneurial leadership; the Joseph Jefferson Awards Committee for his partnership with Robert Falls; Lawyers for the Creative Arts; Lifeline Theatre’s Raymond R. Snyder Award for Commitment to the Arts; Season of Concern for support of direct care for those living with HIV/AIDS and Vision 2020 for promoting gender equality and diversity in the workplace. He taught at the theater school at DePaul University, lectured annually on strategic planning in the arts at Southern Methodist University and frequently consults with local and national theater companies. Schulfer received a degree in economics from the University of Notre Dame where he served as cultural art commissioner and currently conducts an annual seminar on theater management. He received an Honorary Doctor of Fine Arts degree from North Central College in 2009. His celebrated presentation on the economics of the performing arts and business models in the theater industry, WHY NOT FOR PROFIT THEATER, has been seen by numerous theater companies and at national conferences over the past two years. Mr. Schulfer was born in Chicago and is a lifelong resident of the area.
about us

AMERICA’S “BEST REGIONAL THEATRE” (Time magazine), Goodman Theatre is a premier not-for-profit organization distinguished by the excellence and scope of its artistic programming and civic engagement. Led by Artistic Director Robert Falls and Executive Director Roche Schulfer, the theater’s artistic priorities include new play development (more than 150 world or American premieres in the past three decades), large scale musical theater works and reimagined classics (celebrated revivals include Falls’ productions of Death of a Salesman and The Iceman Cometh). Goodman Theatre artists and productions have earned two Pulitzer Prizes, 22 Tony Awards, over 160 Jeff Awards and many more accolades. In addition, the Goodman is the first theater in the world to produce all 10 plays in August Wilson’s “American Century Cycle;” and its annual holiday tradition A Christmas Carol, now in its fifth decade, has created a new generation of theatergoers. The Goodman also frequently serves as a production partner with local off-Loop theaters and national and international companies by providing financial support or physical space for a variety of artistic endeavors.

Committed to three core values of Quality, Diversity and Community, the Goodman proactively makes inclusion the fabric of the institution and develops education and community engagement programs that support arts as education. This practice uses the process of artistic creation to inspire youth, lifelong learners and audiences to find and/or enhance their voices, stories and abilities. The Goodman’s Alice Rapoport Center for Education and Engagement is the home of such programming, most offered free of charge, and has vastly expanded the theater’s ability to touch the lives of Chicagoland citizens (with 85% of youth participants coming from underserved communities) since its 2016 opening.

Goodman Theatre was founded by William O. Goodman and his family in honor of their son Kenneth, an important figure in Chicago’s cultural renaissance in the early 1900s. The Goodman family’s legacy lives on through the continued work and dedication of Kenneth’s family, including Albert Ivar Goodman, who with his late mother, Edith-Marie Appleton, contributed the necessary funds for the creation of the new Goodman center in 2000.

Today, Goodman Theatre leadership also includes the distinguished members of the Artistic Collective: Rebecca Gilman, Dael Orlandersmith, Henry Godinez, Steve Scott, Kimberly Senior, Chuck Smith, Regina Taylor, Henry Wishcamper and Mary Zimmerman. Jeff Hesse is Chairman of Goodman Theatre’s Board of Trustees, Fran Del Boca is Women’s Board President and Megan McCarthy Hayes is President of the Scenemakers Board for young professionals.
