

An Interview with Chicago Abolitionist Asha Ransby-Sporn

by QUENNA L. BARRETT

In the ripple, the wave that carried me home, both of Janice's parents are organizers and activists fighting for better policies and practices that impact their lives and those of other Black folks in their community. In this video interview, activist and community organizer Asha Ransby-Sporn discusses current organizing and movement work happening across Chicago.

Want to learn more about abolition and where to get involved in Chicago? Check out the article "We're on the Freedom Side: the Movement to Abolish the Chicago Police Department", which is also included in Goodman Theatre's resource guide for the ripple, the wave that carried me home